

ECB stays on hold as expected

As expected, the ECB voted to leave interest rates unchanged for a second consecutive meeting yesterday. The rationale for the decision in the meeting statement noted that inflation “is currently around the 2%” target. Meanwhile, the ECB’s updated macro projections were broadly similar to the June edition, and contained moderate growth expectations and a benign inflation outlook. However, there was no firm guidance offered by the ECB today in any of its communications. Remarks by President Lagarde during the press conference though, suggests that there remains a “high bar” for further policy easing.

On the data front, US CPI inflation printed in-line with the consensus yesterday. The headline rate remained at an elevated 3.1%, while the core rate rose to 2.9% in August, from 2.7%. Elsewhere in the US, initial weekly jobless claims spiked to 263k up from 237k, albeit this was largely due to some irregularities in Texas.

Given the ECB decision and the data were broadly as anticipated, rather unsurprisingly the market reaction was muted. Eurozone rate expectations firmed by a few basis points, and markets are now of the view that there is a 50% chance the ECB cuts rates once more (compared to 60% previously). On equity markets, the Euro Stoxx 50 and the S&P 500 moved 0.5% and 0.8% higher, respectively.

Currency-wise, the dollar was on the defensive yesterday. The greenback handed back some of its recent gains amid the positive tone to risk appetite. This sees EUR/USD open today back above the $1.17 threshold. GBP/USD is at the midpoint of $1.35-1.36. EUR/GBP remains near the halfway mark of 86-87p.

Already this morning the monthly reading of UK GDP for July has matched the consensus, stagnating in the month. The release has coincided with a slightly softer tone to sterling in early trading. Later today, the US Michigan measure of consumer sentiment (Sep) is due.
