

Risk averse mood dominates

Investor sentiment was back holding a risk averse stance yesterday after a brief improvement on Wednesday. This was against the backdrop of elevated global trade tensions and the risk of a further escalation in protectionist policies. Concerns over a partial US government shutdown were also unhelpful to risk appetite.

The 'risk-off' tone was evident in the performance of equity markets. In Europe, the Euro Stoxx 50 fell by 0.6%. At the closing bell on Wall Street last night, the S&P 500 was 1.4% lower on the day and in the process entered correction territory (i.e. falling more than 10% below its previous high from February).

The risk averse mood and resulting demand for safe havens was apparent on other assets markets. Bond yields were lower (i.e. prices higher). Meanwhile, on commodity markets, gold hit a new record high, just below $3,000/oz.

On the currency front, the action amongst the majors was confined to fairly narrow ranges. The dollar managed to eke out some modest gains against the euro and sterling. In level terms, this is reflected in the EUR/USD pair opening this morning in the lower half of the $1.08-1.09 band. GBP/USD has edged back below the midpoint of $1.29-1.30. Elsewhere, EUR/GBP remains unable to make a sustained break above the 84p threshold.

Already this morning UK GDP for January has been published. It showed that the UK economy started the year on a weak footing, contracting by 0.1% m/m (vs. f'cast for +0.1%). The other main data highlight today is US consumer sentiment for March. Investors will also be keeping a close eye on tariff related newsflow heading into the weekend.
