

Action packed week ahead

This week sees an action packed calendar. On the political front, the second round of the French elections is on Sunday (7th July). The first round results are showing the National Rally (RN) on 33%, which was slightly below what some polls were indicating. Some analysts are anticipating RN may fall short of an absolute majority. Since the election was called there has been a widening in the French-German 10-year bond yield spread. This reflects market concerns on the impact a more extreme Left or Right wing Government could have on an already elevated French budget deficit. There is a high degree of uncertainty over the outcome of Round 2. This could create some volatility for the euro this week. EUR/USD opens this morning in the upper half of $1.07-1.08

The other key political event is on Thursday with the UK General Election. Polls have consistently been indicating a win for Labour. If the actual result is in line with these polls it would not be a surprise to markets. Therefore it would not be expected to have much impact on sterling.

Data-wise, there are some top tier releases over the coming days. We get the flash reading of Eurozone inflation for June. In the US, non-farm payrolls (June) are due along with a raft of other labour market data, including the unemployment rate. On the central bank front, the ECB hosts its annual Central Banking forum which includes ECB President Lagarde and Fed Chair Powell. The Fed meeting minutes and ECB 'account' are also due.

Given such a busy/varied calendar, there is the potential for some increased volatility on FX markets this week. Expectations of potential intervention by Japan to support its currency will also persist with USD/JPY trading above ¥160.
