

UK in the market spotlight this week

There was a strong risk-off mood in Europe last week, as markets continued to digest the fall out of the EU elections and the upcoming snap election in France. The Euro Stoxx shed over 4%, Eurozone sovereign yield spreads widened, notably with the 10Yr French OAT–German Bund spread blowing out to 80bps on Friday, while the euro was on the defensive.

In the US, a below consensus CPI inflation report for May and a hawkish Fed FOMC meeting impacted sentiment. Overall though, market rate expectations softened on the week, with futures pricing now consistent with 50bps of easing by year end (was 35bps last Monday). Against this backdrop, the S&P 500 gained 1.6% on the week, while US Treasury yields declined by 20-25bps. The softening in US rates spilled over to UK and Eurozone futures also.

The divergence in sentiment sparked some volatility on currency markets. The euro was on under pressure, while the dollar benefitted. EUR/USD tested below $1.07. EUR/GBP traded down to a fresh YTD low of 84.2p. GBP/USD broke below the $1.27 mark.

This week, the UK will be in the market spotlight. Despite a dovish shift at its last meeting in May, the BoE is expected to leave monetary policy on hold this Thursday. A day beforehand, CPI inflation data is forecast to show a decline in both the headline and core rates to 2.0% and 3.5%, respectively. The key services inflation metric is projected to decline to 5.6% from 5.9%.

Meanwhile, a jam-packed data calendar also includes the flash PMI readings for June in the US, Eurozone and UK on Friday. Elsewhere on the data front, US retail sales and industrial production figures for May will also feature.
