Morning Comment

ECB policy decision due today

Yesterday, equity markets on both sides of the Atlantic erased most of their losses from the day prior. Both the Euro Stoxx 50 and the S\&P 500 rebounded by $0.5 \%$. On bond markets, European yields were little changed. In the US, Treasury yields fell by $4-5 \mathrm{bps}$, amid a marginal softening in US futures contracts.

The slight softening in US market rate expectations coincided with remarks from Fed Chair Powell in testimony to Congress. In truth, Powell did not offer much in the way of fresh insights into the Fed's view on the outlook. He reiterated that it will probably be "appropriate to begin dialling back" interest rates later this year, but that further confidence that inflation will progress to $2 \%$ was needed before doing so.

Currency-wise, against this backdrop the dollar was under some downward pressure. The dollar-index (a measure of the currency's value versus a number of peers) fell to its lowest level since the start of February. From a sterling perspective, the currency was unmoved by the UK Spring Budget.

In level terms, the softer tone to the dollar sees EUR/USD open this morning near $$ 1.09$, having traded above it yesterday. GBP/USD is changing hands in the lower half of the $1.27-1.28 range. Meantime, EUR/GBP remains at the halfway mark of 85-86p.

Turning to the day ahead, the main focus will be on the ECB monetary policy meeting announcement. No changes to policy are anticipated, but updates to the ECB staff projections and the press conference with President Lagarde will garner attention. Thus, the meeting poses some event risk for the euro. In the US, further testimony from Chair Powell will also be of interest.
