

BoE and Fed expected to cut by 25bps

Having initially moved higher, benchmark European equity indices finished yesterday in the red, as investors continued to digest President Trump's election victory. His trade policies (increased tariffs) are seen as being damaging to the open European economy. Political turbulence in Germany also provided an unhelpful backdrop for European assets yesterday. Overall, the Euro Stoxx 50 fell by 1.4%. In contrast, the S&P 500 gained 2.5%, amid the potential for tax cuts and deregulation in the US.

On bond markets, US Treasury yields have edged off their peak, but they are still 5-15bps higher than before the US election results started to come in. Meanwhile, German Bund yields fell by 1-5bps yesterday. In the UK, Gilt yields continued to rise, with the 10-year yield moving 5bps higher.

Like-wise, the dollar remained to the fore yesterday, but moved off its highs. However, the greenback still maintained most of its gains registered during the initial aftermath of Trump's election victory. Elsewhere, the euro was under some downward pressure.

In level terms, EUR/USD is operating back in the top half of $1.07-1.08. GBP/USD is in the lower half of $1.29-1.30. Meanwhile, EUR/GBP is trading down in the bottom half of the 83-84p corridor. Elsewhere, USD/JPY is changing hands in the top half of ¥153-154.

Today, the BoE is expected to cut rates by 25bps. Aside from the policy decision, the focus will be on the BoE's assessment of the outlook in its updated monetary policy report and in remarks from Governor Bailey at the press conference. After the close in Europe, a 25bps from the Fed is also anticipated. The press conference with Chair Powell will be of keen interest for markets as well.
