

BoE and Fed cut by 25bps

In line with expectations, the BoE cut rates by 25bps yesterday. It means Bank rate is now at 4.75%. Meanwhile, there was a slightly more hawkish tone to the meeting statement/press conference. However, the overarching message from the BoE was that it should be able to continue to cut rates “gradually” moving forward.

Like-wise, the Fed FOMC opted to cut rates by 25bps overnight, as anticipated. The Fed funds target range is now at 4.50-4.75%. At the press conference, Chair Powell struck a balanced tone. He offered no specific guidance on the future path of policy, and refused to rule “out or in” a further rate cut at the final meeting of the year in December.

Against this backdrop, UK futures contracts were marginally firmer yesterday. Markets are leaning towards a rate cut in February, although it is not fully priced-in. In total, circa 65bps worth of easing is expected between now and end-25 in the UK. In contrast, US futures softened slightly. Current pricing indicates there is a 90% chance the Fed will cut again in December. Further ahead, the target range is seen as being lowered to 3.50-3.75% by end-25.

Elsewhere, equities moved higher on both sides of the Atlantic. The Euro Stoxx 50 and S&P 500 rose by 1.1% and 0.7%, respectively. On the currency front, the dollar shed some of its recent gains. This sees EUR/USD open today in the top half of $1.07-1.08. GBP/USD is in the upper region of $1.29-1.30. EUR/GBP remains close to 83p.

Turning to the day ahead, there is a relatively quiet data schedule. The main release of note will be the preliminary reading of the Michigan measure of US consumer sentiment for November. The headline index is forecast to be little changed in the month.
