EUR/USD starts below $1.04

Currency-wise, the dollar remained in the ascendancy over the festive period, as markets continued to digest the more hawkish tone from the Fed at its final policy meeting of 2024. This saw EUR/USD move back below the $1.04 handle. Meanwhile, GBP/USD edged back into the bottom half of the $1.25-1.26 range.

At the same time, the euro was under some downward pressure during the last number of trading days in 2024. This was evidenced by EUR/GBP falling down below the 83p mark. Elsewhere, EUR/JPY moved back below the ¥163 threshold.

Looking back over 2024 from a currency view point, the final few trading days echoed the broad trends seen throughout the year. Largely owing to a sharp strengthening in the second half of the year, the dollar was the best performing of the FX majors. Elsewhere, the euro was on the defensive, losing circa 4% versus sterling and 6% against the greenback in the year.

Looking ahead, the euro may remain on the back-foot in the near-term. Markets are currently pricing-in a more aggressive path of rate cuts from the ECB compared to the Fed and BoE. Futures contracts indicate policy easing of 115bps in the Eurozone this year, versus expectations for around 45bps and 60bps of cuts, respectively, in the US and the UK. At the same time, political uncertainty amid upcoming elections in Germany, a fragile French Government and the potential impact of the incoming Trump administration, provide an unhelpful backdrop for the euro.

Turning our attention to the first full trading day of 2025, a relatively sparse data schedule suggests there will be a quiet start to the year on currency markets.
