Fed FOMC meeting outcome in focus

There was a cautious tone to investor sentiment yesterday, amid the ongoing escalation of tensions in the Middle East. Some disappointing US data also provided an unhelpful backdrop for risk appetite yesterday. Overall, this saw the Euro Stoxx 50 decline by 1.0%, while on Wall Street, the S&P 500 fell by 0.8%.

Data-wise, both US retail sales and industrial production were a touch softer than anticipated in May. Headline retail sales contracted by 0.9% in the month (vs. -0.7% f'cast), although the control measure (a key core sales metric) rose by 0.4% (vs. +0.3% f'cast). Meantime, industrial production edged 0.2% lower in May, albeit this was offset by an upward revision to +0.1% in April. Elsewhere, US homebuilder sentiment deteriorated to 32.0 in June (vs. 34.0 f'cast).

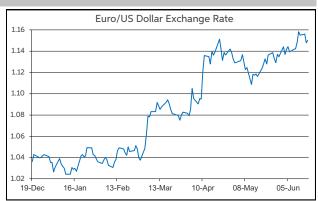

On the currency front, the dollar was holding a somewhat firmer tone, amid the risk averse mood on markets. At the same time, sterling was under dome downward pressure. Overall, the greenback gained circa 0.5% against the euro and around 1% versus sterling. In level terms, the stronger dollar is evidenced by EUR/USD opening this morning down at the $1.15 threshold. Meanwhile, GBP/USD is changing hands back in the lower half of $1.34-1.35. EUR/GBP is up at the midpoint of the 85-86p band.

Already this morning, UK CPI has printed in-line with expectations. Both the headline and the core rate eased to 3.4% and 3.5%. The release has coincided with a slight strengthening of sterling in early trading. The remainder of today's data calendar is sparse. However, after the European close, the focus will be on the Fed monetary policy decision. The FOMC is widely expected to leave rates on hold, meaning the spotlight will be on the updated summary of economic projections, including the interest rate dotplot. The post-meeting press conference with Chair Powell will also warrant attention, as investors look for guidance on the future path of US interest rates.
