

All eyes on Fed rate decision this evening

There was somewhat of a positive tone to investor sentiment yesterday in the lead up to today's US Fed rate announcement. In Europe, the Euro Stoxx 50 gained 0.7%. Meanwhile, on Wall Street, the S&P 500 finished flat, having moved higher earlier in the day.

Data-wise, yesterday's macro diary was US centric. Headline retail sales for August surprised to the upside of expectations, while some of the main underlying details were also encouraging. US industrial production for August also printed ahead of forecasts, although there were downward revisions to prior months. Meanwhile, homebuilder sentiment for September continued yesterday's trend of consensus beating US data.

From a currency viewpoint, there was no noticeable impact on the dollar from the positive US macro newsflow. Most of the FX majors were confined to fairly narrow ranges, although, there has been a slightly softer tone to sterling over the past 24 hours. This is reflected in GBP/USD edging back below the $1.32 threshold, while EUR/GBP is changing hands at the midpoint of 84-85p. Elsewhere, EUR/USD has held onto its position up in $1.11 territory.

Already this morning, UK CPI inflation data for August have been released. Headline CPI remained at 2.2%, while core-CPI printed a touch above the consensus at 3.6% (vs. 3.5% f'cast). Looking ahead, the aforementioned Fed rate decision (after European close) is very much the focus for markets and entails significant event risk for the dollar. The Fed has guided that it will cut rates today. However, there is uncertainty on the size. Over recent days, speculation has increased that the Fed may opt for a 50bps cut, rather than 25bps. Aside from the rate announcement, the updated dot plot and Fed Chair Powell's press conference will also be closely scrutinised.
