

EUR/USD just shy of $1.12

It was a relatively quiet day on financial markets yesterday. Equity markets maintained their upward momentum, with the Euro Stoxx 50 rising by 1.1%, supported by a rise in luxury stocks. On Wall Street, the S&P 500 gained a more modest 0.3%. Elsewhere, oil prices continued to edge higher, with Brent Crude prices rising by 0.5% to $75 per barrel.

Data-wise, the main release of note was the German Ifo for September. The main index declined by more than anticipated from already low levels, consistent with a further deterioration in business sentiment. Meantime in the US, the Conference Board measure of consumer confidence was much weaker than expected, falling to 98.7 in September from 105.6 (and vs. 104.0 f'cast).

On the currency front, the main pairs operated in narrow trading ranges throughout the European session. Of the limited moves to register, the dollar was under some downward pressure. Overnight, the dollar's losses have accelerated. At the same time, the euro has moved off its recent lows.

As trading gets underway this morning, EUR/USD is changing hands up near the $1.12 threshold. Meanwhile, GBP/USD is trading up at the $1.34 handle. EUR/GBP has edged up from its year-to-date low, and is operating at the midpoint of the 83-84p band.

Turning to the day ahead, the data calendar on both sides of the Atlantic is rather sparse. The only release of any note will be US new home sales for August. However, the release is unlikely to impact the dollar. On the monetary policy front, remarks from BoE external MPC member Greene may warrant some attention.
